College Overview

The University of Texas at Arlington's College of Education strives to promote a collaborative culture of excellence in research, teaching, and service. Our goal is to enliven students' lives, to provide them with unique experiences built on high standards, to encourage them to think critically and creatively, and to instill in them a lifetime commitment to learning and service to their communities.

The vision of the College of Education is rooted in the mission of the University of Texas at Arlington to serve the citizens of Texas, the United States, and the world through research, teaching, and service. Our programs are dedicated to the development of intellectual leaders who are prepared to participate in professional, social, and technological change. We prepare professionals who work collaboratively with PK-20 education colleagues and others to improve learner outcomes, promote the advancement of the field through ongoing professional development, the use of evidence-based and innovative practices, and advocate on behalf of all learners and the education profession.

The college currently offers bachelors, masters, and doctoral degrees through its academic units: the Departments of Teacher and Administrator Preparation and Higher Education, Adult Learning, and Organizational Studies. Students may also pursue professional teacher, administrator, and other certifications.

Programs leading to educator and administrator certification in the state of Texas are accredited by the Texas Education Agency.
